Throughout the month of June, our Character Essentials® theme is We Are Leaders. Encouraging children to practice leadership skills – whether it's by taking charge, leading by example, or guiding others – helps them develop confidence and self-esteem.

There are several ways to teach leadership at home, and it can be easily integrated into your everyday routine. For example, you can invite your child to take the lead in planning a meal for the family or even a small gathering. Together you can walk through the steps of brainstorming and delegating tasks, help them create a shopping list, and empower them to learn a new skill.

Given the important role communication plays in being a strong leadership, you can also prioritize practicing communication skills at home. This might include:

- Helping your child become more comfortable speaking up in social settings by encouraging them to share their thoughts, needs, and ideas with others.
- Teaching them how to greet others appropriately.
- Encouraging them to practice ordering their own food in a restaurant.

Some book recommendations that can help your child learn more about being a good leader include:

- "A Sweet Smell of Roses" by Angela Johnson
- "Grace for President" by Kelly DiPucchio
- "Imogene's Last Stand" by Candace Fleming
- "The Ant and the Elephant" by Bill Peet
- "Being a Leader" by Robin Nelson
- "Dream Big, Little One" by Vashti Harrison
- "Little Blue Truck Leads the Way" by Alice Schertle
- "Swimmy" by Leo Lionni
